DENMARK DOCTOR
WILL MAKE TALKS

In This Country on Danish Agricultural Co-operation and Conservation.

COPENHAGEN, Mar. 9.—Dr. Maurice Egan, the United States minister to Denmark, has been invited by the Southern Commercial Society to make a series of talks on "Danish Agricultural Co-operation and Conservation" before the Southern Chambers of Commerce of the United States.

The position of Denmark as a school for the study of scientific agriculture is becoming more important every year and Dr. Egan has made a close study of the methods which have made Denmark a leader in co-operative agriculture, especially in the effect of the plan on the cost of living. This feature will be considered at length by the lecturer in America.

When questioned in regard to the invitation to speak on this subject in the United States, Dr. Egan declared that such a request had been made. He said that he believed that the success of the Danish farmers was not only due to their perfect co-operation but also to the fact that they receive the hearty support and sympathy of the national and provincial government.

"In effecting this," he said, "it was necessary to insure the success of a co-operative agricultural venture that the state should have a certain power of examination over the products sent to market. In moulding the opinion of the farming population here the government has the valuable aid of the Danish high schools. They include both summer and winter sessions for students of mature years of both sexes. These schools, by encouraging national and provincial pride, are at the very root of the feeling which induces the Dane to make every sacrifice to remain at home on his own land rather than emigrate.

The emigration which takes place from some western states to Canada would be regarded as very unpatriotic by Danish people. In the Southern United States what might be called a provincial love of one's own home exists to a larger extent than elsewhere in the country and therefore the south seems to be the place where a modified form of the Danish system would meet with the most encouragement.

The Danish national government keeps a jealous eye upon the quality of its farm products. Recently Denmark was much aroused on account of a complaint as to the standard of butter sent to England. The government ordered an immediate examination and insisted by the Danish farmers, the authorities had little difficulty in restoring the usual standard.

In no country are cattle diseases better controlled than in Denmark. In any case of foot and mouth disease, the farm is entirely closed until it can be thoroughly disinfected, and the farmer is compensated for any loss by the government. In the present state of public opinion in the United States such a close relationship between the government and the individual would perhaps be impossible. In Denmark this feeling is at the bottom of the present agricultural prosperity. The Danes make butter during the winter. Through the scientific application of rotation of crops, the cattle are as well fed in the winter as summer. It may be said that while eggs in Denmark are well controlled and carefully numbered, the system of feeding fowls is not as perfect as it is in some of the American states; but the quality is standardized and cold storage eggs are unknown. The quality of the butter is the best in the world.

Mr. Egan added that the more he studied the agricultural problems in Denmark, the more he was convinced that nothing but a concerted effort, thoroughly drilled, among agriculturists could produce the remedy for the present shortage in the food crop and induce constant prosperity.

The financiers interested in the plan to make a great port of St. Thomas, in the West Indies, are much elated over the submission of the scheme to Parliament by the minister of finance. The syndicate, which will be given the rights to the port for ninety-nine years, plans the expenditure of many millions in an effort to make St. Thomas a universal port by the time of the opening of the Panama canal.

The prime mover of the plan is H. N. Anderson, general manager of the East Asiatic company. The rise of this magnate has been almost American in character. He began to make his own way at the age of 13 as a ship's boy, and at 20 he left his ship in Bangkok and went into business. He was so successful that he became an intimate friend and advisor of the late King Chulalongkorn, who gave him and Anderson the concession of the forests of central Siam. He also granted concessions for power stations and street car examination and insisted by the Danes. In 1897 Anderson returned to Denmark and founded the Danish East India Company, which is now the most important navigation and trading company of the country.

Anderson became a close friend of Prince Waldemar and his late wife, the Princess Marie, who was noted for her business acumen. Encouraged by such influential backing, he established enormous business concerns in all parts of Europe and the Orient, from mining companies to banks.
